*FIONA, from the late 70s till the late 80s more than 4,500 people with bleeding disorders were infected with hepatitis C after getting contaminated NHS blood products.

More than 2,000 have died. My husband David was 10 when he was infected. He's 38 now and we have two children, one aged three and the other 13 months.

David is in the last stage of liver disease prior to cirrhosis. The Government refused to hold a public inquiry into this tragedy. Despite overwhelming evidence, neither Government nor the pharmaceutical companies that supplied the products has admitted fault.

Those living with Hep C, loved ones who have become infected and families of those who've died still have no answers. Will you speak out for us, Fiona?

FP: You put the case very eloquently yourself, Kate.
